VIA HAND DELIVERY

Honorable Naomi Reice Buchwald
United States District Court
Southern District of New York
500 Pearl Street
New York, New York

Re: Compania del Bajo Caroni (Caromin), C.A. v. Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela,
Case No.: 07 CV 3179

Dear Judge Buchwald:

We are counsel to Plaintiffs herein, and in response to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the instant action, we write pursuant to the Court's individual rule concerning motions practice. As Defendants themselves note in their cover letter to Your Honor, they have filed their Motion without the prior notification and pre-motion conference required by the Court's Rules. In submitting this response, we respectfully concur with the suggestion made by Defendants that a scheduling conference be convened at the Court's earliest convenience. Plaintiff's intended Opposition to the Motion is outlined below.

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants, the Government of Venezuela and its Ministry of Mines, confiscated their property, and refused (and still refuse) to pay compensation as prescribed by Venezuelan law. They also allege that, in the course of negotiation over the terms of what was essentially the exercise of eminent domain, the Venezuelan Minister in charge of the matter voluntarily, deliberately, and in exchange for valuable benefits agreed to vest this Court with jurisdiction over any action required to enforce the payment obligation. Plaintiffs contend that this willing acceptance of jurisdiction constitutes an express waiver of sovereign immunity, within 28 U.S.C. § 1605(a)(1).

The Minister, Rafael Ramirez Carreño, signed the document ("the Addendum") which is attached to the Complaint as Exhibit 3, and had a copy delivered to Plaintiffs through normal Ministry channels. Despite his denial, Plaintiffs represent to the Court that they do, in fact, have evidence that the Minister signed the Addendum waiving immunity, and that he did so within his authority and for good and persuasive reasons. Moreover, they have evidence that the affidavits and other materials submitted by Defendants in support of their Motion to Dismiss are at best misleading, and in some instances simply false.

Plaintiffs certainly acknowledge that this action is governed by the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act ("FSIA"), and that Defendants (in one case a state, in the other an agency or instrumentality of that state) are entitled to immunity unless Plaintiffs can persuade the Court that an exception applies. Plaintiffs have what the Second Circuit described, in Cargill Int'l S.A. v. M/T Pavel Dybenko, 991 F.2d 1012, 1016 (2d Cir. 1993), "the burden of going forward with evidence showing that, under exceptions to the FSIA, immunity should not be granted." In the end, however, the Court concluded, "the ultimate burden of persuasion [regarding immunity] remains with the alleged foreign sovereign." Id.; see also Robinson v. Gov't of Malaysia, 269 F.3d 133, 141 (2d Cir. 2001).

Defendants argue first, as matter of fact, that Minister Ramirez did not sign the document. They go on to submit that he could not have signed it, because various universally-observed office procedures were not followed. And finally they contend that he would not have signed it, since to do so would have been inconsistent with fundamental policies and political positions of the Government.

Plaintiffs are prepared to show that all three of these propositions are simply wrong. Indeed, Minister Ramirez did sign the paper, although he has every incentive, and may have left himself every opportunity, to deny it. Defendants work themselves, in their moving papers, into a high dudgeon, pointing with outrage to an alleged plot and a scheme to defraud them through an audacious act of forgery.

This is nothing but empty posturing. What is going on here is indeed a plot, as Defendants allege, but the plot is being perpetrated by the Government of President Hugo Chavez to undermine the rule of law, to deny accountability, and to avoid just payment for valuable assets taken ostensibly for a public purpose, all in violation of both international law and applicable Venezuelan domestic law. The parties agreed to nominate this Court to be the ultimate defender of that law, but the Chavez Government now denies the existence of that agreement.

First, the signature on the Addendum is Minister Ramirez's. Plaintiffs will present the testimony of a handwriting expert who will so attest, comparing the Addendum with other exemplars of the Minister's signature. Defendants make much of the fact that Plaintiffs cannot produce the original of the document, and challenge them to come forward with it. The simple answer -- which Plaintiffs will demonstrate through testimony -- is that the original Addendum was retained in the files of the Ministry of Mines. Indeed, it is at least

Hon. Naomi Reice Buchwald

counterintuitive that a Government agency would release the original of such a document, keeping only a copy for itself.<sup>1</sup>

A handwriting expert can do only so much with a copy. He can, however, (and here will) conclude that the writing is undeniably that of a particular person. He cannot attest to how the signature came to be on the document. In his statement, however, Minister Ramirez goes further. He does not simply deny that he signed the Addendum: he says that the signature is not his.<sup>2</sup> That statement is false, and Plaintiffs will prove it.

Plaintiffs will similarly contradict, through sworn testimony, the denial by Francisco Salas Blanco that he ever saw the Addendum or anything similar to it. In fact, Manuel Fernandez, legal representative of Plaintiffs, prepared the first draft of what became "the Addendum," and handed it to Director General Salas on December 17, 2003. The final, signed version was the Ministry's response to Mr. Fernandez's proposal, delivered back to him four days later.

Defendants' witnesses Orlando Ortecano and Martha Acosta Garcia attest that the document could not be genuine, because normal office procedures were not followed with respect to it. Plaintiffs will provide testimony that such procedures (concerning transmittal memoranda and the kind of seal used to authenticate signatures) were frequently not observed in the Ministry of Mines during the relevant time period.

Finally, Defendants would have the Court consider it beyond imagination that a Venezuelan Government official would voluntarily surrender jurisdiction over what they call its sovereign actions to the courts of any foreign nation, much less the despised United States. The simple fact is that Venezuela regularly accepted the jurisdiction of U.S. courts in investment-related matters in 2003, and still does so (despite the further deterioration of political relations) to this day. Venezuela is a major investor in U.S. energy companies, and the Minister of Mines is himself President of the company that owns and controls Citgo. Plaintiffs will present to the Court a smorgasbord of documents, including contracts, showing <sup>1</sup> Defendants also protest that the signature on copy of the Addendum attached to the Complaint is virtually illegible. It is true that the copy served on Defendants is very poor. At the request of counsel for Defendants, the undersigned provided a much better copy of the same document to them on June 29, four weeks before they filed their Motion. Indeed, Defendants' discussion of the seal on the document demonstrates that they had the better copy at the time the Affidavits were executed, but they did not so advise the Court. Undersigned counsel nevertheless apologize for having used a poor exemplar in the first instance, and enclose with this letter for the Court's use the best copy in their possession, which Defendants have had for six weeks.

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs note that the Minister's letter to the Attorney General submitted as Exhibit 1 to the Motion to Dismiss does not contain the authenticating language required by 28 U.S.C. § 1746 (curiously the other three Exhibits do set out that language). This Court has refused to consider writings produced outside the United States when the submitting party failed to make the required statutory declaration. See, e.g., Sterling Fifth Assocs. v. Carpentile Corp., No. 03 Civ. 6569, 2003 WL 22227960, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2003).

voluntary, express waivers of sovereign immunity by the Government of Venezuela, within 28 U.S.C. § 1605(a)(1).

The Minister signed the Addendum for a good reason. Earlier efforts by the Government to nationalize Plaintiffs' mining concessions had been blocked by the courts. It was considered important to get the massive Tocoma HydroElectric Project underway. Plaintiffs, however, would not yield their right to further judicial challenges unless and until they had a solid guarantee that they would receive whatever payment to which they were entitled according to the decision of the independent appraisal expert as prescribed by applicable law. They did not believe that the courts of Venezuela could or would order payment in the event that the Government dragged its feet.<sup>3</sup> So they insisted on the opportunity for enforcement before a tribunal that they knew would be fair and expeditious. Since the Government had regularly accepted the jurisdiction of the courts of New York in other matters, they put forward that proposal, and it was accepted. In exchange, they undertook that they would not initiate additional blocking measures, or otherwise impede the process, in Venezuela.

What is before the Court, at this juncture, is a contest over the authenticity of a document. If it is real, then sovereign immunity is waived; if it is not, then no FSIA exception applies. This is not an unfamiliar matter for courts to have to resolve, and there is a procedure for doing so. It is set out in Rule 901, Federal Rules of Evidence, and in the caselaw interpreting that Rule. Plaintiffs will demonstrate that the Addendum is what it appears to be, and that it bears the "appearance, contents, substance, internal patterns, [and] other distinctive characteristics," such that, taken in the context and circumstances, it is a valid waiver of sovereign immunity by both Defendants. Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(4).

With the authenticity of the document established, the other defenses raised by Defendants evaporate. The enforcement of a final decree of a foreign government does not implicate the act of state doctrine. Alfred Dunhill of London, Inc. v. Republic of Cuba, 425 U.S. 682, 689-93 (1976). Personal jurisdiction over Defendants is established by the document itself, in which the defense of forum non conveniens is expressly waived.

Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court proceed along the lines endorsed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in similar circumstances in Phoenix Consulting, Inc. v. Republic of Angola, 216 F.3d 36 (D.C. Cir. 2000). The parties should be directed to prepare for and to conduct before this Court a full evidentiary hearing limited to issues of jurisdiction, which in this case means limited to the issue of the genuineness of the Addendum.

<sup>3</sup> Obviously, their concern was well-taken. Even now, before this Court, Defendants do not deny either that they now hold the concessions or that they owe the money: they simply look for excuses for claiming that the obligation to pay it is not enforceable.

Plaintiffs urge the Court to accept Defendants' suggestion that briefing in opposition to and in further support of the pending Motion be deferred until a "pre-motion conference" can be convened, and a plan for (limited) discovery, argument, and trial can be established.

Respectfully submitted,

James W. Perkins
